Just the Right Fit with BoldSign

Introduction

Jason Xu, as an entrepreneur and Australian solicitor, knows how daunting the legal aspects of running a small business can be. That's why he founded Commersion Legal , where he now serves as director, helping firms harness legal innovation.

Challenge

Jason was using an expensive e-signature solution that suffered from feature bloat. All he needed was a simple system that would allow two people to sign a single contract, yet every time he tried to send one, he had to navigate an interface with so many added elements that he couldn't determine which to choose. It felt like he had to relearn the system each time.

His small business was paying too much for features it didn't need, so he set out to find an economical and easy-to-implement platform.

Solution

With BoldSign, he found the simplicity he desired at a cost befitting his business. It was so easy to use, he didn't have to consult its documentation or run through any of its tutorials—the UI was fluid, and anyone who had worked with other e-signature platforms would find it easy to navigate.

Soon after implementation, he was able to concentrate on learning about other aspects of his company—taxes, bookkeeping, hiring, etc.—things that needed attention so his business could grow.

Use case
BoldSign had provided a legally binding solution that I was able to trust and not have any sort of hackable issues. And functionality in the pricing is more than enough.

“The fact that you guys took time to actually have a conversation with me, to onboard me, and to answer any questions I had…I just got so excited about it,” Angel said.

BoldSign provided a solution that made signing with clients so much easier. A few of Angel’s most used features are the ability to have presets saved for W-9s, signatures from mobile phones, and a readily available support team prepared to help at any time.

> “The fact that it’s part of Syncfusion is really, really good; you know it has the runway to last.”
